DESCRIPTION

The Royal Oak is located in the historic market town of Kington, Herefordshire, just 2 miles from the Welsh border. Despite sitting west of Offa's Dyke, the town has been part of England for over a thousand years. Nestled beneath the scenic Hergest Ridge, Kington is a popular destination for walkers and tourists. The town itself has a population of around 3,500 and is well connected to nearby towns including Presteigne, Builth Wells, Knighton and Leominster. The Royal Oak sits just 200 yards from the town centre in a predominantly residential area, offering both local trade and passing custom. Good transport links make the pub accessible, with regular bus services connecting Kington to Hereford, Leominster and surrounding towns, while Leominster railway station provides mainline rail connections further afield.

Pub Layout

The pub offers a welcoming main bar, a cosy snug and a dedicated dining area, which also lends itself well to hosting functions. A fully equipped catering kitchen supports the operation. Outside, a spacious enclosed garden provides an excellent draw for locals and visiting walkers, while the property also boasts three en-suite letting rooms. With the right investment, these rooms present a fantastic opportunity to attract tourists, walkers and commuters alike.

TRADING STYLE

The Royal Oak has a strong foundation as a well-loved local pub, with clear potential to extend its reach into surrounding villages and towns. By introducing a compelling food offer, the pub can attract a wider customer base and encourage repeat visits. The area is a popular destination for walkers and tourists, with Hergest Ridge and other renowned walking routes bringing steady footfall. Historically, the site has traded well on food, highlighting this as a prime opportunity for growth once again. In addition, team sports and entertainment have both been successful drivers of trade in the past, and they remain key areas to develop further to strengthen the Royal Oak's position at the heart of its community and beyond.
